

Wouldn't you love to get fresh, local, sustainable seafood year-round?

Here on the Atlantic Coast, fresh, delicious fish are a big part of our diet and the livelihoods of many local fishermen.

But current fishing rules and a lack of good science are keeping fishermen off the water and many popular seafood dishes off our dinner tables and off local restaurant menus. And it's hurting our economy.

We're the South Atlantic Fishermen's Association, a new and growing organization for fishermen and seafood lovers – from North Carolina to the Florida Keys – who care about catching and eating fresh, sustainable seafood all year round.

Our goals are simple:

- Maintain our fishing heritage by representing fishermen's – and their families' – needs.
- Advocate for year-round, sustainable fishing rules – like catch shares – that work for local fishermen, coastal communities and the ocean.
- Collect better science about fish and fishing practices to put more fish on dinner plates.

Join us in working to make fresh, local and sustainable seafood a reality – year-round.
